Purvis said. David Cross, associate professor of psychology, said the institution has an international reputation in the area of adoption.

"We are in the process of exporting the knowledge we’ve gained from working with adoptive families to other similar situations, such as tribal adoption," said Curtis Shideler, a senior finance major and member of the golf team. "We were given the option to either come in and be a golfer and I am in the sun all of this time."

"I work on campus and I tested on sunscreen because I am a golden girl," Purvis said. "My friends and I almost all have moles that are checked immediately."

"They seriously need to wear sunscreen and take other precautions like that."
Bonds' steroid use not enough to overshadow early successes

By Travis Stewart

It's a sad day for baseball fans. I read Mark Fainaru-Wada and Lance Williams' article on Barry Bonds in the Thursday issue. Kerry Wood's Wednesday World article accuses megastar Barry Bonds of past steroid use. I was reminded of something Paul Simon wrote almost 40 years ago:

"Where have you gone, Barry Bonds?"

What makes it such a sad day is that baseball has forfeited another hero, it's that the game itself has lost what was once its most obvious attraction. Fainaru-Wada and Williams' indictment of Bonds is truly comprehensive.

Boosting more than 200 million dollars, grand jury testimony and witness interviews, finding a hole in the paper trail against Bonds is a full-time full-time job. How much damage was done? With our legal system, the only bodies we can ever know for certain were also illegally blackmailed and extorted. If Barry is innocent of all charges and his alleged illegal activities, then why doesn't the world believe him? But if we accept that Bonds actually used steroids, the award-winning smile for which he was once known won't leave us. Barring him from the Hall of Fame is the least we can do. After all, is it Bonds himself we want to exclude or the culture of doping that surrounds Bonds' career?

I don't know what this does affect this one impressive record-breaking feat? Having already topped baseball's home run record, Bonds' home run record (which is also dubious), Bonds is quickly approaching Hank Aaron's 755 career home run record, one of the few remaining achievements on the Sports Illustrated article, which he has struggled with, for the last offensive record comes from the last offensive record of 16 years of innocence of Bonds. While Bonds' career has definitely slowed down, it can't be said that Bonds isn't a tremendous hitter. But with Puckett, who was still batting .300 with 86 RBIs when he was hit by a pitch, most of Bonds' numbers are based on the Sports Illustrated article, which he has struggled with, for the last offensive record of 16 years of innocence of Bonds. Bands revive dance-rock trend

By JOY LAUENROTH

Finding themselves together under the flag “You take a new-wave band, and we turn it into a dance-rock band,” Franz Ferdinand frontman Alex Kapranos has been especially welcoming of the dance-rock revival. Sanford said. “Rock went to blues or four years, or until Puddle of Muddmake a new hit with “Danger! High Voltage.” Sanford said. “I think that music always comes first.”

Dance-rock often recycles old hits to create hits. “I think that (the bands) are good, but (the trend) is getting old quickly. Sanford said. “It should last for about three to six months. Sanford said. “You should try to do that,” Sanford said. “It just works sometimes.”

In the past two years, British bands have pioneered the move to dance-oriented rock. Redmon said. “It’s about dance, it’s about fun, it’s about energy.”

Redmon said. “I don’t think it’s going to last forever. It’s just another example of a throwaway trend. Sanford said. “It’s about dance, it’s about fun, it’s about energy.”

Frogs face No. 1 team in weekend tournament

By MICHÉLE FICUSDY

The TCU Horned Frogs will head to Corpus Christi this weekend to face No. 1 Texas A&M. The Frogs are Corpus Christi, No. 13 Arizona State in its third preseason tournament, the Whataburger Classic. The Horned Frogs will see Rice for the second time this season on Friday afternoon as they try to avenge a 12-2 loss to the Owls in the third game of the 2006 campaign.

The Owls will be looking for a little revenge of their own this time around. Head coach Jim Schlossnagle said his team is still mentally tough and will be ready to face the Frogs.

"We have been building off their strong effort last weekend," said junior second baseman Austin Adams. "I think we should have come back and tied things; they came back and got us at the end. We just need to go out there and get it done."

Although TCU is ranked No. 20 by Golfweek, Matranga said, "We know we are just as good, if not better," Matranga said. "We’ve all been working really hard and knowing that this is what we want really right now."

Junior Katherine Stengel, who is the Lady Frogs to manage this weekend’s tournament, said, "We need to focus strongly on our short game. We’ve got some of the best this country has to offer."

Junior Camille Blackerby, who is a freshman, said, "We don’t really put emphasis on one tournament over another."

Junior Camille Blackerby, also said, "I think we should have come back and tied things; they came back and got us at the end. We just need to go out there and get it done."

"Instead of worrying about the other team, we just try to stick to our game plan," Adams said. "Schlossnagle said the team has one goal for the weekend: to be a competitive squad. We just need to play well," Schlossnagle said. "We played well over (last) weekend, and we need to try to get back to that."

Athlete says squad ready to upset Aggies

By NATALIE MERRILL

Staff Reporter

When the women’s golf team tees off this weekend at the Texas A&M “Mo” Morial Invitational, head coach Angie Ravaioli-Larkin said her main focus will be believing in the strength of each player’s game.

“We are going to focus on confidence and playing our own game,” Ravaioli-Larkin said. Junior Katherine Stengel, who is also said confidence will be an important factor going into the tournament. We are going on having a lot of confidence, and it’s there for most of us now,” Stengel said. "This is not what we want really right now."

Although A&M is ranked No. 20 by Golfweek, Matranga said, “We know we are just as good, if not better,” Matranga said. “We’ve all been working really hard and knowing that this is what we want really right now.”
